Program Objectives

Today’s agribusiness firms must address an increasingly wide range of needs, from basic food security to ever-shifting consumer tastes. Rapid change—in technologies, business models, natural resources, finance, and government policy—adds to the complexity leaders face as they seek long-term success for their businesses and for the globe’s food supply. For more than half a century, the world-renowned Agribusiness Seminar has gathered leaders from across the industry to examine the latest trends, explore emerging opportunities and challenges, and shape the future of the world’s most important sector.

Curriculum

The seminar engages you in a dynamic learning experience based on the well-known Harvard Business School (HBS) case method. Refreshed each year with more than 10 new cases, the curriculum delivers insights into the latest industry developments and best practices. Expert HBS faculty will guide you in an intensive exchange through which you will deepen your understanding of the industry’s direction, broaden your global perspective, build your ability to lead, expand your network, and improve your ability to set the direction for your company.

Topics of study will include the following:

- Addressing the Needs of Consumers Around the World – How can agribusiness firms attend to evolving demand in diverse markets? How can they respond to changing behavior, connect with consumers, and build differentiated brands?

- Creating More Resilient, Sustainable Supply Chains – How can firms balance tight control and predictability with decentralized flexibility and responsiveness? How should they respond to supply chain disruption? Which structures and alliances will be most successful?

- Harnessing Innovation – How are leading companies increasing their capacity to innovate and bring new products to market? Which innovations are driving change—and attracting investor attention?

- Navigating a Volatile Landscape – How can companies anticipate change and mitigate risk in the face of political and regulatory change, widely fluctuating commodity supplies, dramatic price swings—and shortages of natural resources?

Participant Mix

Seeking a diverse mix of industry leaders, the Agribusiness Seminar welcomes producers, manufacturers, marketers, retailers, policymakers, and service providers to apply. Typical participants are highly experienced thought leaders and key decision-makers for their companies, ranging from senior executives in large multinational firms to leaders of family businesses and agribusiness entrepreneurs.
